The Revival Movement.

Encouraged by the remarkable results which attended their labors in the British Isles, and in response to numerous requests, Messrs. Moody and Sankey, the so-called Evangelists, have commenced a series of meetings in Brooklyn, N. Y., and their purpose is to hold similar meetings in the principal cities of the United States.

These men spent over a year in Ireland, Scotland, and England, and their labors were attended with a success unknown since the days of Whitefield. All classes of society exhibited a deep interest in their work, from the humble peasant to the highest ministers of State.

The name of ex-Premier Gladstone was mentioned as being present at many of their meetings, also that of Lord Shaftesbury and several princes of the royal family.

Of course, on account of their nationality and their disregard of the forms and ceremonies of the established church, they had opposition, and their field of labor, on this account, was somewhat restricted.

They were looked upon by Catholics and English churchmen as strolling Yankees, who had incorporated into their religion the same elements of success which Barnum had brought into business.

Hence came the absurd story which was believed by some, that the great showman was at the bottom of the movement, and that Moody and Sankey were only his paid agents.

The Americans took a deep interest in the labors of these two men, but we suspect that national pride will not allow us to do with it. We are gratified at the fact, that the religious heart of Great Britain was deeply stirred by the noble efforts of two of our citizens; that lords and ladies, and even nobility, attended upon their ministrations, and that the dignitaries of the established church were frightened at the influence which their labors had upon the masses.

The feeling which we had respecting them was very much like what we would have toward any two of our fellow citizens, who should achieve a great business success in foreign parts.

It is generally agreed that there is nothing especially remarkable about these two men, and their success was the only thing remarkable about their labors in Europe.

Moody preaches and Sankey sings. The former is an undersized, stocky man, with no pretensions to eloquence. He is forcible and energetic, and relies principally upon these qualities to attract and hold the attention.

He speaks with great rapidity, has a nasal twang, is abrupt and simple, and about most of his expressions.

The latter sings rapidly, and often makes mistakes which he is obliged to go back and correct. He seldom speaks more than twenty minutes at a time, and when he notices the least inattention in his audience, he pauses and calls upon his co-laborer for a song.

The series of meetings commenced in the Brooklyn risk, which had been fitted up for the occasion, last week, and on Sunday last it is estimated that more than one hundred thousand persons desired to gain admission.

In speaking of this meeting, a correspondent of the Boston Journal says:

"The religious and church had asked all the world to attend, and all the world responded. The meeting was very orderly. But when a crash as was expected in the afternoon, was never before seen in these parts. There are thousands of people who devote their entire afternoon to recreating themselves in the quiet of their homes.

The meeting will fill the auditoriums of the city and is black with visitors. The gardens and beer saloons of East New York have visitors than could be numbered. On Sunday evening the Park was thinned; the public taverns, other groceries and beer gardens were empty; and the just and unjust, the bold and the vicious, the religious and the profane, passed through the streets of every imaginable place. Crowds came from New Jersey, Staten Island and Hartlepool, up New York and lower New York—hundreds of people to witness what they knew not what."

The order was passed authorizing the State Commissioner for the western districts, under the direction of the committee on fire, to rebuild the north wall near Emily Barber's house, if deemed expedient.

The committee on new streets, reported that they had laid out a road beginning at the southwest corner of Henry Clark's farm, thence to land of Gideon Hallowell, and thence to the Cross Hill road, about sixty rods. Damages to Henry Clark, $100. Report accepted.

The committee on fire department, on order of Aug. 9th, concerning the condition of the Bridge street engine house, made a report, stating that the said house is in an unsafe condition, liable to be precipitated over the bank into the gully below, and that the house cannot be made safe except by a large outlay in securing a foundation.

The committee suggested that the committee on the building or foundation would be of money. Report accepted.
